Chip Wood

We invite you to join us for a parenting presentation from educator and author Chip Wood

Wednesday, January 24 from 6:30 to 7:30 p.m.

Whether parents or educators we are all guides for children on their journey toward adulthood. By exploring the developmental span of childhood we gain valuable information to support this important work. Chip's work over the past forty-five years has included being a classroom teacher, principal, parent educator, non-profit executive director, district administrator and educational consultant.

Chip is best known for his book Yardsticks (4th edition, January 2018) and his advocacy in the field of child development. He is a co-founder of the Greenfield Center School and co-developer of Responsive Classroom, a K-8 professional development approach as well as co-developer of Leading Together: Strengthening the Adult Community of Schools

“How children see the world and how they think and act at school is affected by their developmental differences, but also by the family cultures and values they bring to the classroom.” From Yardsticks by Chip Wood
