Most Likely to Succeed is a 90-minute documentary examining the history of education in the United States, revealing the growing shortcomings of conventional education methods in today's innovative world. The film explores compelling new approaches that engage students, energize teachers, and lead to deep, retained learning. MLTS premiered at the prestigious Sundance Film Festival and was an official selection of more than two dozen festivals. To date, Most Likely To Succeed has screened for thousands of audiences around the world, igniting conversations and empowering change. After seeing this film, the way you think about "school" will never be the same.

"Most Likely to Succeed provides a new vision of what is possible in today's schools...creativity, project-based learning, technology-enabled instruction and a student-centered culture. This film should be watched by every caring parent and educator who wants to improve the learning process."
